NOTE FROM THE EDITORS

Juan John

This issue felt like a love letter to growing up as a young adult in college. It was so much fun to make, and we really wanted to showcase the openness and freedom of what that transition from being a child to becoming an adult could look like while away at college.

It can be absurd, abrupt, dreamy, dark, and overall a colorful experience. It was important to emphasize color and emotion throughout this issue. We explored the good, bad, and ugly truths of young adulthood and how college can be a navigator for finding who you are. Many find themselves, and many lose themselves. But throughout the madness of life, you form an identity.

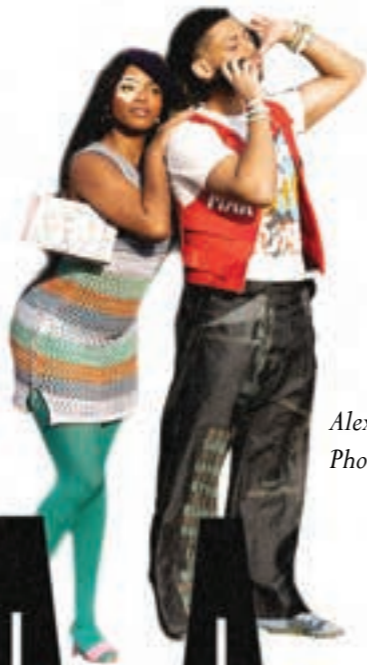

In a way, this issue has also been a big step in furthering the definition of who we are as an organization. Like anyone else going through these years, we pushed the limit, experimented with our style, and came out this semester knowing more than before. For some of us, this is the last issue we'll have a hand in, and we couldn't be more proud of how it turned out. We hope you enjoy!!

Major, defined as important, serious, or significant. We go through identity crises, crushes, and unhinged moments. Individually, we are all important and that's MAJOR. Our stories are personalized, yet we grow together, giving each other the opportunity to keep climbing the ladder to success. We've got to become in tune with what is rather than confusing ourselves about the what ifs.

When we feel ourselves struggle but cannot move, we are growing within ourselves in these moments of stillness. Growth is not always external, not always visible. Growth is a side-effect of challenges and setbacks.

Bamboo grows for five years before reaching the surface. There is no expectation from its observers and peers in nature to be ready to interact with the sun when premature. Bamboo fights all its battles concealed within Mother Nature's embrace.

We are like bamboo in the sense that our growth is not visible to the eye, but constructive and constant in the years of our youth. Where we differ is that we do all of this out in the open air, vulnerable and with the appearance of maturity. We dress ourselves in the identities we have adopted for today, unsure of who we will be tomorrow. Every outfit change is growth. Every major change is growth. We are growing by facing challenges. We are growing within ourselves.

Soon, like bamboo, we will grow up. We will grow toward that light which inspires each of us. Soon, we will find and fulfill a purpose we recognize and nourish as our own.

I realized that whatever life I wanted I could have. I could wear all kinds of clothes. Be friends with all kinds of people. I placed a lot of limitations on my life, these past couple years I have been letting them go. Not caring about the stares or the judgments of other. What mattered to me was being honest. Being major to me means being authentic. Being true and real. Every day I decide to show up. As my biggest, loudest and proudest, most colorful self. I make that choice every single day. I definitely wouldn't have it any other way!

This feeling always hits on a spectrum from terrifying to thrilling.

Regardless of where one's feelings frequent the spectrum, LEWK is here to provide some peace of mind that anyone struggling is always in good company with these feelings. Read on for ways to maintain balance in these opportunistic years, but also how to utilize these newfound freedoms. No one person could ever give enough perspective on the chaos that is our college years, so here is a variety of perspectives from seniors, transfer students, and graduates to explain how they took advantage of their college years while maintaining enough gravity to graduate.
